

Mari Keski-Korsu is a post-disciplinary artist who explores how ecological changes manifest in everyday life. The work is based on collaborations with different kinds of communities and species. Her medium of expression is a hybrid combination of participatory performance, community and live art. Her current practice for several years, is focused on inter-species communication and care to possibly enable empathy towards whole ecosystems. She is interested in intersections in between art, activism and science from permaculturic and ecofeminist perspectives. Currently, she's artist member of an art & science team working in Access Abisko-programme in sub-Arctic Sweden, researching on how climate breakdown affects values and rituals. Since 2020, she is a doctoral candidate to study towards Doctor of Arts degree in Aalto University's School of Arts, Design and Architecture.
